

The big heart who helped another reach its destiny

How a late night phone call to Abhay Soi, the chief MD of a New Delhi hospital, helped a terminally-ill heart patient get a new lease of life. The gesture came free of charge, despite multiple roadblocks and challenges

For a 56-year-old patient, who was lying at New Delhi's BLK Super Specialty Hospital with a terminally ill heart, a miracle was what he needed. But all that he could do was hope, pray and wait for a donor heart.

As he waited to get a new lease of life, his miracle came in the form of the family of a 30-year-old from Jaipur, who had passed away in an accident. The patient had a donor now, but aside from the logistical challenges, the big problem was the cost of the transplant, which the patient couldn't afford.

On many past occasions, the management, employees and shareholders at BLK have contributed financially towards saving lives. I am glad we were able to make a difference again this time.
